Join the Breckenridge Outdoor Education Center (BOEC) for four nights and five days of adaptive rock climbing, ropes course, and rafting under the sunny skies of Breckenridge, Colorado. Open registration is open to those ages 12-16 who are diagnosed with sensory processing disorders, learning and/or attention deficits and development delays. BOEC requires that all students be fully independent with self-care tasks, or be prepared to bring a “buddy” to camp. Through outdoor activities such as rock climbing, whitewater rafting, and camping – designed around established experiential education models – students will have the opportunity to develop social skills, teamwork traits and leadership qualities that will transfer into everyday life.

This is a mobile course that begins at BOEC’s site in Breckenridge, Colorado. Students will be involved in cooking, cleaning and gear preparation during the course; however, the emphasis will be on having fun in a structured setting.

All instruction, meals, rustic accommodation, group camping gear, specialty equipment, transportation during the course and 24-hour instruction & supervision by professional BOEC staff will be provided. Participant will need to provide their own transportation to Colorado.
